Buying on BN.com The Adventures of Tom Sawyer revolves around the youthful adventures of the schoolboy protagonist of the novel, Thomas Sawyer, whose reputation precedes him for causing harm and hostility. Tom lives with his aunt Polly, half brother Sid and cousin Mary in the quaint city of St. Petersburg, near the banks of the Mississippi River. St. Petersburg is described as a typical atmosphere of a small town, where the Christian faith prevails, the social network is cohesive, and familiarity. Unlike his brother Sid, Tom receives a lick from his aunt Polly; Ever a evil-maker rather play on the hook than attend school and often sneaks out of his bedroom window at night to adventures with his friend, Huckleberry Finn Social Outggail Of City. Tom, despite his fear of learning, is very smart and would tend to get away with his antics if Sid wasn't such a tattle tale. As punishment for skipping school to swim, Aunt Polly assigns Tom a job of whitewashing the fence surrounding the house. In a brilliant scheme, Tom is able to con the neighborhood boys into completing the job for him, managing to convince them of the joys of whitewashing. At school, Tom is equally as bright, and attracts attention, chasing other boys, screaming, and running around. With his usual antics, Tom tries to catch the eye of one girl in particular: Becky Thatcher, the judge's daughter. When he first sees her, Tom immediately falls in love with Becky. After defeating her, Tom invites them to get engaged. But when Tom accidentally blurs that he was engaged before with Amy Lawrence, he destroys his relationship with Becky and becomes heartbroken. One night Huck and Tom slip away at midnight in the city cemetery, where they plan to hold a special ritual used to treat warts. Believers in superstition and folklore, the two expect the cemetery to be full of ghosts. Hearing voices coming up to them, the two boys hide in fear: The voices belong to Indian Joe the villainous savage, Potter-city drunk, and Dr. Robinson. Three men are robbing! Soon a fight broke out between Dr. Robinson and two other men. As Dr. Robinson grabs a headboard and knocks Potter's liquor unconscious, Hindu Joe grabs Muff's knife and punches the doctor to death. The boys run away from the cemetery before they learn that Indune Joe plans to frame for the murder of the doctor. Fearing the Indian Joe and terrified of what they witnessed, Huck and Tom swore to keep quiet about the nightly events. The next day brings only grief for Tom. Aunt Polly learns from Sid that Tom escaped the night before and cries over him. At school, Becky snubs Tom, oblivious to his boyish antics. Offended and angry, Tom collects a gang of pirates: himself, Joe Harper and Hock. The three boys decided that they had a fairly normal society and run away to Jackson Island, in the middle of The Mississippi River. When the boys went missing, the whole city assumes that they drowned in the river and the inhabitants pull the river for their bodies. In the dark of night, Tom sneaks off the island to return home and leave a note for Aunt Polly informing her that he is not dead. Instead, he eavesdrops on Polly and Mrs. Harper, plans for their funeral. The boys then wait until the morning of their own funeral, sneak back into town and attend their own funeral before revealing to the congregation that they are alive! At school, boys envy every pupil; however, Tom has yet to return Becky's heart. When Tom inadvertently catches Becky reading the teacher's book, she jumps out of surprise and breaks it. Later in the day, when the teacher questions Becky whether it was she who broke the book, Tom lies and says that it was he who committed the act. Although he accepts the punishment for Becky, he takes away her love and attention. After the school is released for the summer, the trial of Potter begins. The city of St. Petersburg has already condemned an innocent man in their minds. Tom and Huck both tormented their guilty conscience, and are made to feel even worse when Potter thanks them for being kind to him. When the trial begins, the defense board summons Tom Sawyer to testify. To the surprise of Huck, Potter, and all those in the audience, Tom divulges everything he knows about the murder, naming Indian Joe as Dr. Robinson's killer. Until the end of the trial, Indun Jo runs out of the courtroom before anyone can catch him. Indune Joe is reported missing, and Potter is released with an apology from the city. Meanwhile, Tom is afraid that Joe's indoun will try to avenge him for being a witness, and Huck has similar fears. One day Huck and Tom decide to dig up buried treasures in an old haunted house on Cardiff Hill. When they begin the search, the entrance of two strange men surprises the boys. Hiding, Tom and Huck realize that one of the men - an indian Joe in the mask of a deaf-mute Spaniard. Tom and Huck watch as Indune Joe and his accomplice discuss plans for a revenge job. Two villains plan to hide a bag of six hundred dollars in a haunted house and meet there; but when they hide their bag of money, they discover a box of buried treasure, which was already hidden in the treasure of a haunted house, which once belonged to a gang of robbers. Villains decide to hide their prey in number two under the cross and leave the house. Obsessed with receiving treasure, Tom and Huck plan to follow the Indian Joe and find out where the treasure is buried. Becky, who was out of town, returned to St. Petersburg and had a picnic for all her friends. As part of the picnic, children go to explore the cave of McDougal: a large cave with secret underground passages. Unbeknownst to other picnickers and adults, Tom and Becky lose deep in the cave. In the meantime, Huck has come to terms with the expectation outside the Temperance Tavern, where they suspect Indune Joe remains. On the verge of failure, Hek's patience is rewarded when two villains go out into the night and go to a haunted house. But instead of entering the haunted house, the villains go to the house of the old widow Douglas, with the intention of torturing and possibly even killing her. Recalling the times when the widow bestowed on him his kindness, Huck rushes to Mr. Jones's house, informing him of the plans of the Indian Joe to harm the widow. Mr. Jones and his two youngest sons rush to the widow's estate and scare off Indian Joe and his accomplice before any harm is done. Word of the widow Douglas' immediate attack is circulating across the city. But the news of the missing children erupts, and for now the whole city is concentrating on prayer and finding Tom and Becky. Deep in the cave, Tom and Becky lost all sense of direction. With the last of their candles burned and no food to eat, the two know they can starve to death. Tom tries to comfort Becky, and continues to explore the passages of the cave in the hope of finding a way out. Turning one passage, Tom sees the man and shouts at him; to his surprise, the figure belongs to the Indian Joe! Terrified of Tom's screams (and not recognizing the boy's voice), Joe's indian escapes. Tom never tells Becky about this incident, fearing we'll cause her even more worries. Eventually, Tom's perseverance pays off when he discovers a tiny hole that the children manage to crawl through and avoid danger. With the safe return of Becky and Tom, the city of St. Petersburg rejoices. Judge Thatcher ordered that the door to McDougal's cave be locked and sealed with metal. When Tom finds out about it, he finally tells the judge that Indune Joe is in the cave. Breaking the sealed door, Tom, the judge and other citizens find the Indian Joe in the mouth of the cave, starving to death. When he meets Huck, Tom informs him that he knows where the treasure is buried. Accepting the treasures for the lost, Huck wants to return to the cave Of McDougal with Tom in search of money. After eradicating the hoard from the cave, the two boys return to the city, only to be injected into the living room of Douglas's widow. To express her gratitude to Huck for saving her life, the widow intends to provide Huck with a permanent home and provide him with education. Claiming that Huck is now self-rich, Tom spring ahead with their newfound treasure, totaling more than twelve thousand dollars. In conclusion, the novel ends with Huck and Tom discussing their future plans to become world-class robbers. In order to continue to use our website, we ask you to confirm your identity as a person. Thank you so much for your cooperation. A creative and mischievous boy named Tom Soyer lives with his aunt Polly and his half brother, Sid, Mississippi River City, St. Petersburg, Missouri. After playing croquet out of school on Friday and soiling his clothes in a brawl, Tom did to whitewash the fence as punishment on Saturday. First, Tom is disappointed to have lost his day off. However, he soon deftly persuades his friends to exchange him small treasures for the privilege of doing his job. He exchanges these treasures for tickets issued at Sunday school to memorize Bible verses, and uses tickets to claim the Bible as a prize. However, he loses most of his fame when, when asked to show his knowledge, he incorrectly replies that the first two disciples were David and Goliath. Tom falls in love with Becky Thatcher, a new girl in town, and persuades her to engage with him. Their romance collapses when she learns that Tom was involved before - to a girl named Amy Lawrence. Shortly after being shunned by Becky, Tom accompanies Huckleberry Finn, the city's son drunk, to the cemetery at night to try the warts medicine. In the cemetery, they witness the murder of a young Dr. Robinson Native American half-breed Indian Joe. Terrified, Tom and Huck run away and swear a blood oath not to tell anyone what they saw. Indun Joe blames the crime of his companion, Potter, an unfortunate drunk. Potter is illegally arrested, and Tom's anxiety and guilt begin to grow. Tom, Huck and Tom's friend Joe Harper run to the island to become pirates. Sporting around and enjoying their newfound freedom, the boys realize that the community will sound the river for their bodies. Tom makes his way home one night to watch the noise. After a moment of remorse for the suffering of his loved ones, Tom is amazed at the idea of appearing at his funeral and surprising everyone. He persuades Joe and Huck to do the same. Their return is greeted with great joy, and they become the envy and admiration of all their friends. Back at school, Tom returns in Favor of Becky after he nobly takes the blame for the book she tore. Soon begins the trial of Potter, and Tom, overcoming the guilt, gives evidence against the Indian Joe Potter, but the Hindu Joe runs out of the courtroom through the window. Summer comes, and Tom and Huck go on a hunt for buried treasures in a haunted house. After venturing upstairs, they hear the noise below. Peering through the holes in the floor, they see how the turkey Joe enters the house under the guise of a deaf and mute Spaniard. He and his companion, an untidy man, plan to bury some stolen treasures of their own. From their hiding place, Tom and Huck squirm with delight at the prospect of digging it. By a surprising coincidence, Indune Joe and his partner find a buried box of gold. When they see Tom and Huck's tools, they become suspicious that someone is sharing their hideout and taking away the gold instead of taking it away. Huck begins to shadow Indian Joe every night, watching the possibility nab gold. Meanwhile, Tom goes on a picnic in The Cave of McDougal with Becky and their classmates. That same night, Huck sees Indun Joe and his partner leave with a box. He follows and eavesdrops on their plans to attack the widow of Douglas, a good resident of St. Petersburg. Running for help, Huck will prevent violence and become an anonymous hero. Tom and Becky got lost in the cave, and their absence was not discovered until the next morning. People of the city begin to look for them, but to no avail. Tom and Becky ran out of food and candles and they begin to weaken. The horror of the situation is amplified when Tom, looking for a way out of the cave, finds himself on the Indian Joe, who uses the cave as a shelter. After all, just as search engines give up, Tom finds a way out. The city celebrates, and Becky's father, Judge Thatcher, locks up the cave. Indun Joe, locked inside, starves to death. A week later, Tom takes Huck to the cave, and they find a box of gold, the proceeds of which are invested for them. Widow Douglas adopts Huck, and when Huck tries to escape civilized life, Tom promises him that if he returns to the widow, he can join Tom's robber. Reluctantly, Huck agrees.
